Treasure Island

This text is based on Chapter 12 of the book “Treasure Island”.

After finding a map that used to belong to a pirate, Captain Flint, Jim Hawkins sets off with a ship and a crew to find the treasure. On the ship, He overhears that Long John Silver is planning to take all the treasure for himself. Jim is about to tell the captain when someone shouts that they can see an island ahead.

The crew gathered on the deck like flies in the sun and pointed at the island. “Have any of you ever seen that land before?” asked captain Smollett.

“I have, sir,” replied Long John Silver. “I was a cook on a ship that landed here once.”

“Can you remember anything about it?” said the captain while looking into a telescope.

Silver nodded, “It used to be visited by lots of pirates. They called it Skeleton Island.” He continued, “You see the greatest hill there? They called that Spy-Glass because it’s where they looked out for any unwanted visitors.” The crew followed Silver’s gaze- surrounded by clouds, the hill was an ominous sight.

Captain Smollett pulled something from his pocket and spread it out. Silver recognized it as a map of the island and felt a rush of excitement. However, he felt disappointed when he couldn't see a big, red cross. This wasn't the treasure map that he was looking for. "This is a very detailed map," he said slowly. "Pirates definitely didn't make this."

Silver pointed at the edge of the map, "There it is, Captain Kidd's Anchorage. That's a safe place to leave the ship."

"Excellent," said Captain Smollett. "You can go now." Silver moved away and walked towards Jim. The young boy felt scared. Maybe the pirate knew that he had overheard his plans. Silver stopped and put a hand on Jim's shoulder. "It's lovely, this island – perfect for a lad like you to visit. In fact, I'm sure there's lots of exploring that you could do in those hills." A wicked grin spread across his face and Jim started to shake. Maybe Silver did know something after all.
