The early memories of school live with us for the end of our lives. I still remember my first day at school, my feelings, what I wore and my parents' advice. I wasn't scared but excited to enter a new world. I still remember my first blue bag my mom bought me. I loved that bag.

On the first school day, they gathered us in a big room and the teacher taught us how to introduce ourselves. I could hardly pronounce my name correctly. The teachers were very nice to me but I was excited and also nervous. I remember my mother giving me her watch and showing me what time she would be back to take me home. It was too big for my wrist, but having Mum's watch to look at calmed me down and I began to have fun. I knew that my mother had to leave and I had to stay in a crowded room where all the little kids were screaming and most of them were crying. It didn't look like an enjoyable place. But as soon as my mother left, I saw a little face at the next desk who smiled at me - that was the moment I met my best friend ever!

Now, I am at a secondary school and the journey from the first day till now seems very long. It is only normal not to feel excited now when I go to school. I am familiar with everything going on and with the faces I meet on every school day. I hope I'll finish my last year at school successfully and go on to university.
